Depending on the severity of your vision loss you'll either be registered as sight impaired (previously "partially sighted") or severely sight impaired (previously "blind"). Your eye specialist (ophthalmologist) will measure your visual acuity (ability to see detail at a distance) and your field of vision (how much you can see from the side of your eye when looking straight ahead).

Night blindness, as most of us know, is a visual impairment which occurs in darkness. One may not categorize it as total sightlessness, but the loss of vision in these cases is quite substantial. Such people are unable to adjust their vision in dim lights or darkness. Night blindness can be present in some from the time they are born.

Blindness is one of the many, albeit rarer, complications of uncontrolled diabetes. Having higher than normal blood sugar levels is not a direct cause of blindness, but it does increase the risk of developing serious eye conditions such as diabetic retinopathy, which over time can lead to permanent loss of sight.
