How Cancer Affects the Patient and their Family – Ed-Watch

Family members of cancer patients who were integrated quite early on demonstrated lower depression and distress scores. Hence, family members should be integrated in the decision-making process early on and not only if patients' condition has worsened in the acute care setting or when end of life decisions have to be made [48, 49]. Furthermore, family members should be perceived as a separate unit from patients with their own needs and wishes as these can considerably differ from that of ...
