If you adopted an adult dog with behavioral issues, or missed the symptoms of aggression in your pet's puppyhood, there are still ways to stop aggression even when it becomes a serious problem. Depending on the specifics of your problem, here are some effective solutions that will transform a grumpy pooch into a calm pup. Situation #1: My dog is aggressive toward strangers

Aggression in Dogs: Signs, Causes, Types, And Solutions

Defensive aggression: Similar to fear aggression—the dog attacks in defense of something rather than trying to retreat first. These dogs have generally given other, more subtle, indications that they want to be left alone before biting, such as turning their head away. Social aggression: The dog reacts aggressively to other dogs in social situations. Dogs that are not socialized properly with other dogs and people may also exhibit aggression.

What is dog aggression? Aggression is a normal part of the way animals behave. Often people only consider aggressive behaviour in dogs to be a problem when it reaches biting, but it can include lesser degrees, such as 'grumbling', growling, snarling, teeth-baring and snapping at the air without making contact.

Dogs and Canines behaviour | RSPCA

Avoid punishing, bullying or intimidating a dog that is showing aggression. If a dog on a leash aggresses towards another dog walking by and receives hard punishment in the form of jerking, hitting, kicking or restraining, the dog not only learns to fear the person punishing them but also sees the other dog's presence as a trigger for that punishment, which will make the dog even more insecure and likely to aggress again the next time another dog walks by.

The easiest way to get rid of aggression in both fearful dogs and dominant dogs is to remove them from the role of decision maker or pack leader. Think about it, with dominance-based aggression, if your dog thinks he's in charge, he's going to be checking up on all the other dogs with far more attitude. I see it all the time where dogs are running around with chests out and tails up, checking the other dogs out in a very business like way, like it's part of their job.
